Printed by the Government Printer, Harare
“2A Guiding Principles

(1) The biodiversity, ecological integrity of forest areas and ecosystems must be protected, conserved and used sustainably.

(2) Plantation forests should be increased and their contribution to national and local economies should be enhanced sustainably.

(3) The many economic, environmental, social, cultural, spiritual and aesthetic functions and values of forests and woodlands need to be maintained through reduction of deforestation and accrual of benefits from forests by rural and urban communities.

(4) Planting and conserving trees on farmlands improves land productivity and provision of forest goods and services.

(5) The value of urban tree resources is multifaceted as they enhance environmental, social, economic and aesthetic values.

(6) Trade in competitive wood forest products offers potential for increased economic development through employment creation and income generation as well as export earnings but requires an enabling environment for commercial activities, incentives and investment in the wood manufacturing industry.

(7) Sustainable harvesting of non-timber forest resources for nutrition, health and income generation contributes to poverty reduction.

(8) Given the complexities and uncertainties inherent in the functioning of natural systems, sustainable management of forests needs to be flexible, adaptive and based on sound science.

(9) A knowledgeable and well-informed public on forestry issues is essential for effective forest conservation and sustainable management. In addition, indigenous knowledge and practices have valuable contributions to the sustainable use of forest resources.

(10) The role of forests and trees in climate change should be recognised, given their unique ability to contribute to both climate change adaptation and mitigation.

(11) Laws are an essential component of effective management of forest resources; therefore they should be dynamic, locally and internationally accountable and should set demands, impose duties and create obligations to society for sustainable use, management and protection of forest resources.

(12) Efficient, and coordinated institutions at community, district, provincial and national levels are key to effective forest resource conservation and management.

(13) Mainstreaming of forestry in other sectors’ policies and activities in government, private, community and civil society organisations is vital for an effective forest management system.

(14) The participation of multiple stakeholders, the public sector, private sector, local communities, and civil society in forest management has the potential to improve forest conservation and productivity.

(15) Inclusion of women and gender balance is vital to forest management; hence the role of women should be recognised and promoted.
(16) Commitments made at regional and multilateral forums on forests and their use should be reflected in national policies, legislation and practice to ensure sustainable forest management.

(17) The Commission shall endeavour to provide an equal and fair opportunity in employment of all competent persons and to prohibit discrimination in employment on grounds of race, gender, ethnic background, disability and religious affiliation.”.
